The civil unrest and political reform in Egypt that began in 2011 has spurred reforms that continue today, resulting in rapid economic and social growth. Egypt, home to the largest school system in the Middle East, strives to provide equal access to education for girls and boys, and has put specific emphasis on STEM programs, communications programs, and incorporating technology into classrooms throughout the country. Struggling with a teacher shortage, which is near a crisis point in Egypt, and aiming to enact expansive education advancement plans through the Ministry of Education, Egyptian educators are eager to welcome U.S. education experts to discuss challenges and best practices

Design Thinking has been receiving attention in education as a set of strategies applicable to student learning, teacher development and educational innovation. There is a clear need for scholarly and practical evidence and examples of educational approaches that bring design into education—particularly in regard to formative design. The goal of this symposium is to bring together scholars interested in the role of formative design and design thinking in a collaborative and discussion and peer-review process to develop potential submissions for the Journal of Formative Designs for Learning (JFDL). While the focus of this symposium is on design thinking and how it relates to formative design, we are open to various approaches, tools, processes, and ways of viewing and applying formative design and design thinking in teaching and learning.

Inspired also denotes to fill someone with the impetus or ability to do or feel, especially with creativity. As educators and learning professionals, we hope the convention sessions will inspire you to do and feel, so we desperately need influential, stimulating, exciting sessions that will spark fires in our attendees. We encourage proposals that offer opportunities for AECT members to seek out professional development sessions, occasions for improving pedagogical strategies and technical skills, and engage in professional renewal. Reports of research, practice, evaluations, service, and pedagogy are all welcome. Proposers should attempt to address this theme in their proposals, highlighting where the proposal addresses this theme.*

*Take this opportunity to connect with your peers! The goal of the convention is for participants from around the world to learn from the experiences and activities of the convention, enriching their professional lives.
